Diana Browning Wright is a behavior and educational consultant with 41 years experience working with fragile youth, from severe disabilities through emotional disturbance. Diana is a former teacher, school psychologist and behavior analyst working with students with and without a broad range of disabilities, specializing in LRE, behavior support, and developmental assessment. She is co-founder of the California Positive Environments, Network of Trainers (www.pent.ca.gov) and faculty member of the LRP national legal conventions on educating students with disabilities. She has written three books on behavioral RTI, published research on effective behavior plans in peer reviewed journals as well as numerous practical guides and articles, many of which are accessible at www.pent.ca.gov, in addition to being a nationally renowned speaker on evidence based bullying and threat assessment methods for administrators and school teams.

She currently leads school district initiatives across the country, from Hawaii and Alaska through New York, and numerous places in between, in establishing effective LRE and teaching, writing behavior plans that work, effective school teaming for behavioral RTI, threat assessment, programming for students with emotional disturbance and severe disabilities and other topics. Diana is known for blending law, best practice and research to produce use-tomorrow materials for her clients.
