Using Books and Literacy Activities to Teach Social-Emotional Skills
- Name
- Age of children
- Setting

3 ECR strategies
1. What questions do you have about the strategies?

2. Have you had challenges when:
   – planning?
   --using them with children?

3. Results?
Goals

1. Learn to use books and literacy activities to teach children to name emotions and express them in healthy ways.

2. Review 3 ECR strategies:
   - teaching vocabulary
   - connecting the book to the child’s life and experiences
   - asking questions
Promoting Social Competence

- Positive relationships with children, families, colleagues.
- Well-designed environment
- Social and emotional teaching strategies
- Intensive, individualized interventions
Early Learning Standards for Preschool Children

- Standard 9.2: Children show increasing ability to regulate their behavior and express emotions in appropriate ways.

- Standard 9.4: Children develop the ability to interact with peers respectfully and to form positive peer relationships.
Iowa Quality Preschool Program Standards (QPPS)

Standard 1, Relationships:

• 1.10 Rather than focus solely on reducing the challenging behavior, teachers focus on:
  --teaching the child social, communication, and emotional regulation skills and
  --using environmental modifications, activity modifications, adult or peer support, and other teaching strategies to support the child’s appropriate behavior.
Iowa Quality Preschool Program Standards

• 1.11 Teaching staff help children manage their behavior by guiding and support children to:
  – persist when frustrated
  – play cooperatively with other children
  – use language to communicate needs
  – learn turn taking
  – gain control of physical impulses
  – express negative emotions in ways that do not harm others or themselves.
Iowa Quality Preschool Program Standards

Standard 3: Teaching

• 3.5 Teachers help individual children learn socially appropriate behavior by providing guidance that is consistent with the child’s level of development.
Center on Social and Emotional Foundations for Early Learning

- Confidence
- Concentration and persistence on challenging tasks
- Ability to listen to instructions and be attentive
- Ability to effectively communicate emotions
- Capacity to developing good relationships with peers and adults
- Ability to solve social problems
If a child doesn’t know how to read, we teach.
If a child doesn’t know how to swim, we teach.
If a child doesn’t know how to multiply, we teach.
If a child doesn’t know how to drive, we teach.
If a child doesn’t know how to behave, we ______. Teach or punish?

(Tim Herner, NASDE president, 1998.)
• Find a partner.
• Select a book.
• Read the book.
Lesson Plan

• Write the title and author.
• Guess at the age range the book is most appropriate for.
Being able to name their own emotions--to describe what they are feeling--is one of the first steps in helping children learn to appropriately express emotions.
Think about the children you care for and educate. What words would you like them to be able to use to describe/name their feelings?
Direct Teaching of Feeling Vocabulary
Teaching New Words

• When you have used this strategy in the past, what has been the most difficult step for you to plan for and use with the children?

• What made it difficult?
Demonstration

• Pretend you are a group of 4 year olds and respond when I ask you to do so.

• Take notes on your handout. Write what I say or do that demonstrates each step.
• Work with your partner and define one word.
• Follow steps 6 a-d on your lesson plan.
• Write what you will say/do for each step.
• If you finish, define your second word.
Lonely

Lonely means you feel depressed because no one will pay attention to you or play with you or because your parents and brother and sister have left you at child care, which makes you mad as well as lonely, and have gone to work or school.
Jealous

When you are jealous you feel mad or sad or confused inside your body. You want what someone else has.
• Work with your partner
• Answer items # 3 & # 4
• What specific social-emotional skills does your book teach?
Connecting the book to the child’s life and experiences

• Why do we do it?
• Work with your partner.
• Write what you will say about your book to connect it to your children’s lives and experiences.
• Connect it to the social-emotional skill and/or word to describe a feeling that you will emphasize the first time you read the book.
Tell us:

-the social-emotional skill you want the children to learn
-the word to name a feeling you want the children to learn and
-what you will say to connect the book to the children’s lives and experiences.
When you ask questions, you…

- Focus children’s attention on the skill/word you want them to learn and
- Check the children’s understanding of the book--you make sure they are learning what you want them to learn.
The questions we ask when reading should…

• Be about important concepts in the book--what you want children to learn
• Use words children understand
• Not be too long or contain multiple questions
• Be stated in an appropriate format for the children’s age
What do you think the child is feeling and why is he feeling that way?
• What do you think the child is feeling?

• Why do you think he is feeling that way?
• Work with your partner.
• Write 2 questions to ask before reading the book to children:
  – Help them become interested in the book
  – Focus on the skill and/or word you want them to learn
• Tell us:
  - age of children
  - word and social-emotional skill you want the children to learn
  - your questions
Criteria for Questions

• Will the questions help the children become interested in the book?
• Are they focused on the skill and/or word you want them to learn?
• Do they use words children understand?
• Are they too long/contain multiple questions?
• Are they stated in an appropriate format for the children’s age?
• The questions you ask DURING the time you read the book and AT THE END of the book should focus children on the word and/or social-emotional skill you want them to learn.

• The children’s answers should tell you if they are learning what you want them to learn.
• With your partner, write 2 questions you can ask WHEN you are reading the book and....
• 2 questions you can ask at the END.
Criteria for Questions

- Will the questions help the children remain interested in the book?
- Are they focused on the skill and/or word you want them to learn?
- Do they use words children understand?
- Are they too long/contain multiple questions?
- Are they stated in an appropriate format for the children’s age?
Activities Need to Be….

• Purposeful. Fun, engaging and designed to teach the new words/skills you want them to learn.

• Integrated throughout the day, week, year.
• What kind of activities could we use to reinforce the words/skills books teach?
Jose and Amelia seem really happy to be playing together. They are smiling and laughing.

Provide labels as children experience different feelings.
Sample Game

Why did we have you create your own lesson plan?

• Not one available for every book
• Don’t explain how to teach new words
• Some suggest questions but not all
• Some talk about how to connect the book to the children’s lives and experiences but not all.
Create activities that will reinforce the word/skill you want children to learn.
• Select a few activities to do during the week you first read the book and put a #1 by them.

• Identify which ones you will do during the second week and put a #2 by them.
In summary:

• Reviewed ECR Strategies
  — Teaching new words
  — Asking questions
  — Connecting the book to a child’s life and experiences

• Developed a lesson plan

• Intentionally teach children what to do using books and activities.

Language Module

Principle 1
Children need to have many experiences to develop background knowledge and language skills

Strategy
Provide a variety of meaningful experiences using daily routines or planned experiences

Principle 2
Children need frequent opportunities to talk about their experiences and ideas using words, phrases, and sentences

Strategy
Talk with children before, during, or after an experience or activity
- Use sentences to match children’s understanding
- Provide children with time to talk
- Engage children in conversation
  1) Make comments or statements
  2) Ask questions
  3) Respond and add new information to children’s comments and questions

Principle 3
Children need to learn and use new vocabulary or words continuously

Strategy
Indirectly teach vocabulary by introducing or reinforcing a variety of words or concepts to expand children’s conversation
Reading Module

Principle 1
Children need to interact with books

Strategies
- Select appropriate books
  - Match children’s skills and interests
  - Non-fiction and fiction
  - Predictable books
- BEFORE reading
  - Read title, author, and illustrator’s names
  - Predict what will happen in the story
  - Preview the story
  - Directly teach new vocabulary words
  - Connect the story to real-life experiences
  - Give children a reason to listen
- DURING reading
  - Point to pictures that are meaningful to story
  - Make predictions
  - Ask questions
  - Answer children’s questions
- AFTER reading
  - Ask guided story questions
  - Use sentence completion
  - Relate to children’s experiences

Principle 2
Children need to practice retelling stories from books

Strategies
- Model retelling stories from books
- Provide story retelling opportunities
  - Use prompts, props, or cues with young children
  - Allow children to retell stories on their own, once in a while

Principle 3
Children must be aware that spoken language is made up of words, parts of words, and sounds in words

Strategies
- Awareness of words (3 years of age)
  - Rhyming
  - Sentence completion
- Awareness of parts of words (4 years of age)
  - Segmenting words: taking words apart
  - Blending words: putting words together
- Awareness of sounds in words (5 years of age)
  - Focus on same/different sounds
  - Alliteration

Summary of Book:

1. What vocabulary words will you teach the children so they will understand the book? List all possibilities. Be sure to include new words to name/describe feelings.

2. Put a check by one or two new words that name/describe feelings that you will teach the first time you read the book.

3. What social emotional skills does the book teach? (How to be a friend? What to do when you are mad?)

4. Many books teach more than one social-emotional skill. Put a check by the skill you want to focus on the first time you read the book.

ECR Strategy: Connecting the book to the children's life and experiences

5. When reading the story, what will you say to connect the book to the children's lives and experiences?
ECR Strategy: Teaching Vocabulary Words

6. When reading the book, how will you:

   a. define the new word and explain how it is used in the story?

   b. demonstrate what the word means?

   c. repeat the new word often?

   d. encourage the children to say the new word often?

ECR Strategy: Asking Questions

7. What questions will you ask to help the children learn the social-emotional skills presented in the book? What questions will you ask to make sure the children understand the new word(s) you taught them?

   If appropriate for the age level of the children, ask all 3 kinds of questions: yes-no, "wh" and open-ended.

   a. Before I read the book, I will ask:

   b. During the time I'm reading the book, I will ask:

   c. After I read the book, I will ask:
8. Select 3 areas (Circle Time, Art, etc.) Create 2 engaging activities for each of the 3 areas that will reinforce the new word and/or social-emotional skill you want children to learn.

Every Child Reads Follow-up Module:
Using Books and Literacy Activities to Teach Social-Emotional Skills
Teaching Children New Words From Books

It is important for children to start school knowing the meaning of many different words. Research shows that children who start school with large vocabularies are more likely to be successful readers.

Children learn the meaning of words through conversations with family members, child care providers, teachers and peers. They also learn new words when listening to someone read a book to them. However, the number of words children may hear through conversations and being read to differs depending on how often family members and early care and education providers talk with children and read to them.

A research study conducted by Doctors Hart and Risley (1999) found:
Children heard 2,100 words per hour in the average professional family, 1200 words per hour in the average working class family, and 600 words per hour in the average welfare family. When the daily number of words for each group of children was projected across 4 years, the four-year-old from the professional family heard 45 million words, the working-class child 26 million, and the welfare child only 13 million. As Jim Trelease writes in his book, The Read-Aloud Handbook, this means that “all three children will show up for kindergarten on the same day, but one will have heard 32 million fewer words—which is a gigantic difference.” (p.14) (1) (Hart and Risley used the same terms that the census does to describe the economic status of the families.)

Conversations alone do not teach children all the words they need to know. Trelease states that most conversation whether it is between two adults or with children, consists of 5,000 words we use all the time. 83 percent of the words in normal conversations with children come from the most commonly used 1,000 words, and it doesn’t change much as the children grow older. There are then another 5,000 words used in conversation less often. “Beyond that 10,000 mark are the ‘rare words’, and these play a critical role in reading. The eventual strength of our vocabulary is determined not by the common 10,000 words but by how many “rare words” we understand...Printed text contains the most rare words and this is one of the reasons why it is so important to read to children...Regular conversations will take care of the basic vocabulary, but when you read to the child you leap into the rare words that help most when it’s time for school and formal learning.” (pp.17-18) (1)

How do you teach children new words that are in books? First, you need to decide what words to teach them. To make this decision:

Read the book before reading it to children and identify all the words the children might now know. Select 1 to 3 words to teach the children. How many words you select depends on the age of the children. You can teach additional words each time you read the book to them.

When selecting the words to teach, chose those that:
Every Child Reads Follow-up Module:
Using Books and Literacy Activities to Teach Social-Emotional Skills
Teaching Children New Words From Books

a) are important for the child to know to understand the story
b) are used often in the story
c) represent a concept they can identify with and use in everyday conversation (2)

(However, don’t forget to teach rare words also!)

Define a new word and explain how it is used in the story

"In the story, the children play with Patrick and Sam who are tortoises. Another word for tortoise is turtle. A tortoise, or turtle, has four legs and a brown or green shell. The shell is very hard."

"In the story, Lisa is reluctant to leave the Laundromat without Corduroy. Reluctant means you are not sure you want to do something."

"In the story, Mrs. Mallard will find a place she likes and Mr. Mallard will be delighted. Delighted means happy."

Depending on the age of the children, their background knowledge, and the work you are teaching, you may want to do more. After defining the word and explaining how it fits in the story context, you could say, “What makes you delighted?”

If that is too difficult, you could say, “What makes you delighted? Ice cream or a thunderstorm?”

Demonstrate what the word means

With people, places or things:
- Balloon: Show a balloon and say, “This is a balloon.”
- Smooth: Show a smooth rock and say, “This rock is smooth. Feel this smooth rock.”

With action words: Act out the word; then have children act it out.
- Delighted: “This is what I look like when I am delighted.”
- Under: I am putting my hand under my chair. Put your hand under your chair.
- Guess: Hold a coin in one of your hands and ask the child to guess which hand it is in. Say, “You don’t know which hand has the coin, but can you guess?”

You can also show a video clip where the word is illustrated: Clifford running.
Every Child Reads Follow-up Module:
Using Books and Literacy Activities to Teach Social-Emotional Skills
Teaching New Words When Reading to Children

The first few times you repeat the new word, you may want to do so slowly and dramatically to call attention to it.

Make this into a game: “Every time you hear me use the word reluctant, raise your hand.

“Say the word delighted with me.”

“Someone might be reluctant to eat a food they never had before, or might be reluctant to ride a roller coaster because it looks scary. Think about something you would be reluctant to do. Start your sentence with, “I would be reluctant to______

After each child responds, call on another child to explain the response. For example, if a child says, “I would be reluctant to eat ______,” ask another child, “What does it mean that Brett is reluctant to eat ___?”

After you read the book:
- Balloon: Blow up a balloon and bat it around.
- Delighted: Make a picture of someone looking delighted or cut pictures of people from magazines who look delighted.
- Smooth: Let the children pick up smooth rocks as they go on a walk. You might also demonstrate smooth by cutting up a piece of fruit that has a smooth surface (apple) and sharing it as a snack.

Asking questions is a strategy to use when talking and reading with children. Questions take three forms: yes/no, “wh—“ and open-ended. Yes/No questions are the easiest for children to answer followed by “Who” and “What” questions. The most difficult questions for children to answer are open-ended questions.

As a child matures, she/he is able to answer more difficult questions. Adults must provide children with many opportunities to answer more thought-provoking questions. Listen closely to answers you get to all questions. Adults can often learn much about feelings, fears, hopes, likes and dislikes of children from their answers.

Yes/No Questions
These questions usually begin with words such as: is/are, do/does or can/will/would/should. When asked this kind of question, children do not have much opportunity to practice their language skills and adults don’t gather much information from children who just answer “yes” or “no”.

Examples:
— You don’t look happy today. Are you feeling sad?
— Would you like to go out and play in the snow?
— You zipped your coat by yourself! Do you feel proud?

“Wh—“ Questions
“Wh—“ questions give the adult more information and often an idea about how much the child understands. If the adult asks, “Where did you put your socks?” and the child answers, “My Mommy buyed them for me,” the adult knows the child did not understand the word, “Where...”.

Examples:
— When did you start feeling sad?
— What made you feel so surprised?
— Where did this happen?

Open-Ended Questions
Open-ended questions can be answered in more than one way. They usually begin with “Why”, “How” or “What will happen if...“. Open-ended questions are very important because children’s answers allow adults to determine if they understand the kind of question begin asked, the experience they are having or what they are learning.

Examples:
How did this argument get started?
Why are you two yelling at each other?
What would happen if Patrick asked you for your toy?

Children understand and can answer:

1. “If You’re Happy and You Know It”
Add these new verses to teach feelings:
- If you’re sad and you know it, cry a tear...boo hoo
- If you’re mad and you know it, use your words, “I’m mad”
- If you’re scared and you know it, ask for help, “help me”
- If you’re happy and you know it, hug a friend
- If you’re tired and you know it, give a yawn.
Ideas for other verses?

2. Sing to the tune of “Row, Row, Row Your Boat”
-Happy, happy smiling faces, look at my big grin. I am happy, see my face, making a big grin.
-Sad, sad frowning faces, look at me boo hoo. I am sad, see my face, crying big boo hoos.
-Surprise, surprise is my face, eyes are open wide. I’m surprised, see my face, eyes and mouth open wide.
-Nervous, nervous is my face, eyebrows and teeth are tight, I am nervous, me oh my, trying with all my might.
-Proud, proud is my face, shoulders and smiles are big; I am proud, standing tall, smiling really big.
3. Sing to the tune of “Happy Birthday”
   -When I’m happy, I smile. When I’m happy, I smile. When I’m happy, I smile.
   When I’m happy, I smile.
   -When I’m sad, I frown…
   -When I’m mad, I scowl…
   -When I’m tired, I sleep…
   -When I’m bored, I find a friend…
   -When I’m worried, I talk to mom (or dad)…
   -When I’m frightened, my heart beats fast…
