Director Report

Director Judy Jeffrey reported on the following items:

- Carol Greta has been elected as President of the National Council of State Education Attorneys for 2006. She is an ex-officio voting member of the NASBE Board of Directors.
• An exemplary Iowa Vocational Rehabilitation program was featured in a prestigious national newsletter, World Institute on Disability. We are extremely proud to have Iowa Vocational Rehabilitation recognized as the feature article in this national newsletter.

• Thirty-one Iowa teachers received National Board Certification in 2005. That brings the total to 489 Iowa teachers having earned this certification. Jeffrey commented on the importance of receiving an annual legislative appropriation to keep this program available.

• The High School Summit was extremely successful with nearly 1500 teachers and administrators from Iowa schools attending. The feedback was very positive. Dr. Willard Daggett, International Center for Leadership and Education, was the guest speaker. The Center and the Department are going to sponsor 20 high school sites this year to work directly with the institute. This will present many unbelievable opportunities for these high schools to work with a national expert. In 2007, 20 more high schools will be selected to participate.

• The Center for Reinventing Public Education provided information on state licensing rules last fall. Iowa was one of six states mentioned as having learner-focused leadership standards for licensing. Jeffrey felt this was a direct result of the work with the Wallace grant in Iowa.

• The Iowa House of Representatives held a public hearing on state standards. The public comment received verified the fact that the definition of standards in Iowa was not clear. She feels there needs to be an understanding of the definition of standards in Iowa.

• The Early Learning Work Team has completed and posted on the Department website the detailed information on the Iowa Quality Preschool Standards which the State Board endorsed last year.

• The enrollment for quality preschools had only increased one percent last year. She encouraged members to continue to promote that all young children have access to a quality preschool.

• Jeffrey has completed visits to all Iowa community colleges. She indicated they are tremendous education and economic development partners and are offering excellent programs to the citizens of Iowa.

• The Second Annual High School Enrollment Report by the Community Colleges was distributed. Jeffrey provided some explanation of how the data is used.
• The Department has been working with the Governor’s Office, and Charlie Burner and Sheila Hansen from the Child and Family Policy Center on ways to promote quality preschools and early childhood education in this state. The Policy Center will be holding press events across Iowa on March 31 and has invited members of the State Board to participate.

• The Department has received a National Governor’s Association Grant to improve literacy at the high school level. The Department will be releasing the names of three successful high school applicants for this work.

• Jeffrey reported that she will be speaking at an Iowa Farm Bureau meeting on March 2 on keeping public education viable in the state.

Extended School Year

Dianne Chadwick, Administrative Consultant, Division of Early Childhood, Elementary and Secondary Education provided information on the extended school year. Governor Vilsack had requested that the State Board of Education conduct a study on extended learning time. Chadwick reviewed the literature and compiled findings from the research on the impact of extended learning time for K-12 students.

Upon reviewing the research, she indicated the findings reported that a revised schedule alone does not improve the quality of teacher and student interaction. The crucial issue appeared to be how the time is utilized. The quality of the program and of the instruction is the most important variable. For quality programs with concentrated academic learning time it appeared that more time can make a difference in student achievement. The research also called for focused, cohesive programs of professional development for teachers and school leaders, imperative for developing the needed knowledge and skills for making time matter.
Iowa Jobs for America’s Graduates (I-JAG)

Lt. Governor Sally Pederson, I-JAG Board Chair and I-JAG President, Laurie Phelan presented information on the I-JAG program.

I-JAG, Inc. was formed in 1999 to develop a statewide system of school-to-work transition and dropout prevention for Iowa’s youth facing multiple barriers to success and is modeled after a highly successful, nationally proven program that is currently in 30 states and is celebrating its 25th Anniversary this year. In following the national JAG model, the work of I-JAG is to:

- Increase graduation rates for students facing multiple barriers to success
- Develop workplace competencies that aid in effective school to life transitions
- Provide 12 months of post-high school follow-up
- Provide individual career planning
- Raise student aspirations
- Teach teamwork; volunteerism and leadership
- Provide extra help for academic success

Pedersen noted that data indicated the I-JAG model had proven itself to be an effective way to reduce high dropout rates, improve attendance, increase student GPA, improve graduation rates, and successfully transition students into continued education and work. The goals had been achieved by connecting students to family, school and community through a solid curriculum and a dedicated staff person whose full responsibility was only to the I-JAG students.

I-JAG has served over 2,500 students in partnership with 17 Iowa schools, helping to improve the quality of their education, life choices and work competencies.
